CRUISE INFRASTRUCTURE

Star Cruises operates dedicated passenger terminals in Port Klang and Langkawi Island in Malaysia that are frequented by world-class cruise ships. Both terminals are purpose-built and capable of handling vessels up to 100,000 gross ton and 300m in length.

Star Cruises Terminal in Port Klang received 216 calls from cruise ships from around the world. Some of the world-class cruise ships that called were SuperStar Virgo, SuperStar Gemini, Legend of the Seas, Rotterdam VI, Nieuw Amsterdam, Royal Viking Sun and Sky Princess. The Terminal achieved a passenger throughput of 113,736 passengers in 1999.

The Star Cruises Terminal in Langkawi Island achieved a passenger throughput of 92,513 passengers from 107 calls received.

Star Cruises will construct and operate the Bangkok Cruise Terminal with the Port Authority of Thailand in 2000. The US$15 million project will feature a world-class cruise terminal building with a 365m berth capable of docking even the largest cruise ship. To date, Star Cruises has established jetties and other port facilities in over ten ports of call in the region.

PASSENGER SAFETY

The safety of cruise passengers is Star Cruises' top priority. Star Cruises is one of the first cruise lines to be certified for the International Safety Management Code (ISM) in 1998 as directed by the International Maritime Organization (IMO). Star Cruises has a young and modern fleet equipped with the latest in navigational control and fire systems and has implemented extensive safety features such as hi-fog sprinklers even in the engine rooms which are not required by IMO regulation until 2005.

Star Cruises is also looking into implementation of computer-based AMOS-QUALITY for all quality manuals across the fleet. The Star Cruises QA System implemented two and a half years ago ensures regular intermediate audits on all ships.

A safety campaign (SAFIR) is constantly ongoing in order to train ship personnel to be even more aware of safety practices and policies on board.
